The store superintendents decline to discuss the edict, but the employes say notice was served last Saturday that every girl employe who wears her hair bobbed must come to work Monday with a net over her hair.

Miss Helen Armstrong was the first to fall under the rule. As she went to get her hat and wrap to-day after being dismissed, she said: Orders were issued that bobbed hair would not be permitted and those of us who have bobbed hair were told to wear nets over it until it grew out. I refused to wear net, so I was told to leave."

No. I'd kiss these visions goodbye, and recognize once and for all that God Ms to make a woman a writer, or an actress, or a beauty of the silver screen. It isn't anything she can do for herself, no matter how hard she tries, or how much she would like to be one. Then I'd get down to hard pan and attempt to dig out whatever germ of talent I had. Perhaps I wouldn't be conscious of having any special ability in any particular line, but there isn't anyone who hasn't got some aptitude in some definite direction.

I should ask myself: What do I do best? What am I most interested in doing? Cooking? Keeping a nice house? Washing? Shopping? Sewing? Am I clever at accounts and quick at figures? Do I like to handle beautiful fabrics? Have I should be counted to the content of the conte seted in doing? Cooking? Keeping a nice house? Washing? Shopping? Sewing? Am I clever at accounts and quick at figures? Do I like to handle beautiful fabrics? Have I a good figure, and a natural style and grace in the way I wear my clothes? Do I spell well, and have I a good English education and some little turn for writing a good letter? Have I a pleasing personality and do I make friends readily?

I should try to put vanity aside and get my real number, for I should know that my success or failure dedpended on the estimate I made of my ability being correct. Then I should try to find out the kind of work that I enjoyed doing most, because we never readily do any work well that we do not find pieasure in doing just for its own sake. You have to love your job to make a good job of it. If I liked to cook, and found real pleasure in keeping a clean and orderly house. I should start a boarding house. If badeed sewing, I would become a dressmaker or a milliner. If a new hat thrilled me like a strain of music, and I never saw a frock without wondering how I would look in it. I should become a mannekiquin. If I liked figures and could add up a column at sight, I would be a bookkeeper. If I could spell by ear, and loved pigeonholes and filing away thing in them. I should be a stenographer. If I enjoyed seeing and handling lovely clothes and handling lovely c

A woman writes me that her husband has died leaving her with two little girls and $1.500, and she twants to know how she shall invest the money.

Well, if I were in her place, after I had put the children to bed. I would sit down and have a good long heart-to-heart session with myself, and try to take stock of my abilities. I would put aside the vague dreams that every woman has in which she pictures herself as a world famous writer, with six best sellers to her credit, or as a star with her name in electric lights over a theater door on Broadway and people fighting to buy seats to see her, or as a movie queen of transcendant beauty who draws a salary that she has to coarry home on a truck.

I to do, I should take part of my myself to do it. I should not best school that taught the particular thing I wanted to do, and learn ail that they could teach my about craftsmanship.
